Q: Why can déjà danser be used to refer to a single-person, non-rehearsed dance? The verb déjà is used to speak about the fact that a past action has already taken place (meaning that it did not require any particular preparation or performance time). The noun form of the verb, déjà vu, is used for the sense of an uncanny familiarity with something that you have seen in the past. But in these cases, the verb always refers to things that had a future meaning (like the actual, planned, and/or perceived performance of an action, or of a rehearsed dance). Is it possible that déjà danser can be used to refer to a single-person, non-rehearsed dance? L'actrice d'Hollywood saluait un déjà dansé son public en décrivant le confort de la matière. Déjà dansé son public l'actrice d'Hollywood au confort de la matière. A: When talking about action verbs, one needs to check the subject to make sure that we're referring to an actual existent action. Otherwise, it would be a he said, she said. Therefore, it does not make sense. For example: "She told her friend about her meeting with Tom, which she had already done 10 minutes ago." This is awkward, and it also looks weird. I think you can use it to talk about an action that was done before. But, you would need to make a sentence with a subject that can refer to the action that was already done. (however, I don't think this sentence has an exact meaning) For example: I danced the salsa 20 minutes ago, so, I am tired. I danced the danse équestre 20 minutes ago, so, I am tired.
