1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a photography apparatus, and more particularly to a photography apparatus suitable for use in a video tape recorder having a mode for controlling the frame rate of still picture data.

2. Description of the Related Art There is known in the art, in a VTR (video tape recorder) which is capable of recording/reproducing pictures, that different frame rates are applied to the recording of pictures depending on the size of the pictures to be recorded. Also, in some VTRs, frame rates different from each other depending on the size of the pictures to be recorded are applied to the recording of still pictures as well as to the recording of moving pictures. The term "recording of still pictures" used herein refers to a photographic process such as photography of an object, photography of a scene, photography of a still photograph, photography of a photographic print for printing, photography of a still video (movie) and the like. The term "recording of moving pictures" used herein refers to a photographic process such as photography of a movie of an object, photography of a real-time scene, photography of a motion picture, photography of a moving picture, photography of a video and the like. In a VTR capable of recording/reproducing images, in order to reduce the number of times of changing the frequency of the video signal during a frame period, i.e., in order to reduce the amount of image drop out during a frame period, it is desirable to apply a frame rate for which a long frame period is set at the recording time of a still picture of a large screen to the recording time of a still picture of a small screen, and conversely apply a frame rate for which a short
